BANK WITH INTEREST FOR BETTER PASTURES

At one time Pittsylvania may have been considered a "one-crop" or a "one - conversation - topic" county, but not so anymore. Pasture improvement is a "hot" subject among a large segment of its farm population, with Bryan Nuckols, a dairyman in the Rondo section, as a strong advocate, says J. F. Blair, county agent.

Nuckols operates a 249 acre dairy farm, to which he has recently added an additional 96 acres through long-time lease. He is presently carrying 86 head of Holstein cows and replacement heifers. He has no bull, since he is completely sold on artificial breeding.

PATRICK HENRY BOYS PLANTATION
at "RED HILL", CHARLOTTE COUNTY, BROOKNEAL, VIRGINIA

A capital funds campaign is being organized to secure funds to build the Patrick Henry Boys Plantation—a home for homeless and neglected boys. Boys Plantation will be built on the tract of land once owned by Patrick Henry and where he last lived and is buried. The first building of Boys Plantation was completed this year.

In 1950, Nuckols started dairying on his original 179-acre farm with 20 cows. The summer was dry and he fed what hay he made during the summer months, and bought his winter supply. The DHIA Summary and analysis record for the years through 1958 shows that through pasture fertilization, good breeding, feeding and management, Nuckols stepped up his milk production from 10,028 to 12,674 pounds, and his butterfat from 375 to 472 pounds. "This level of production on a conventional dairy farm depends on good pastures," Blair observes.

Nuckols started his pasture improvement program when he started dairying. In 1950, he fertilized with 600 pounds of 2-12-12 per acre. He repeated this treatment in 1951, and from 1952 to 1955 he applied 800 pounds. Then he went to higher analysis and used 600 pounds of 5-10-10 fertilizer in 1956, '57, and '58. He has both native and orchard grass-ladino pastures, most of which was already seeded when he started his dairy program.

In 1957, Nuckols bought an adjoining 70-acre farm now he has used entirely for pasture. About half of this acreage is an excellent fescue sod and the rest is in orchard-grass and ladino and native bluegrass. It is used to graze replacement heifers and dry cattle.

"Most of Nuckols' pastures are somewhat shy of legumes," Blair says "A nitrogen fertilizer would greatly increase grazing in the spring and fall, but with his acreage productiveness, even nitrogen will not be needed this next year."

From ample silo space Nuckols supplements his pasture in dry summer months with silage. He uses both terraces and strip cropping on his farms, and has just built a 2-acre irrigation pond that can be used if needed.

In discussing pasture improvement with Blair recently, Nuckols commented on a statement he had heard Dr. T. B. Hutcheson, formerly head of the agronomy department at VPI, make once, that soil was a good "bank" for depositing some extra money through the use of fertilizer — a bank that could be drawn upon for a year or so if income was short, without injury to the crop or soils. Since soil tests this year show phosphate and potash to be "very high" Nuckols was advised to draw on his "bank" in 1960 instead of making any deposits. "Mennwhile, he'll get a very good interest rate, too," Blair believes.

REGULATIONS ON ASC PROGRAM

From the local ASC office comes news about changes in the 1960 Conservation Reserve of the Soil Bank that are expected to bring new farmers into the program in some areas.

Change No. 1 is a return to the method used in the 1959 program in determining basic annual percentage rates.

Change No. 2 makes a landowner eligible for the program in case he loses his tenant and finds it necessary to take over operation of the farm himself.

The third change extends until October 9 the deadline by which farmers must take the first step toward placing cropland in the reserve in 1960.

The return to the 1959 method of determining basic rates is the result of a legal change made by Congress in the final days of the recent session and signed by the President on September 21.

When the 1960 program was originally announced, the law required that payment rates to farmers be based on actual crop production history on the land the past five years. Some farmers have held back from the program on this account, contending that a rate fixed on this basis is not realistic because many farms are affected by drought or natural disaster in one or more years out of five.

The new law lets the farmer's basic rate be determined chiefly on the basis of the productivity and value of the land for agricultural purposes, just as it was for 1959. For most farmers the ASC office indicates, the basic rate for 1960 will be exactly the same as the maximum rate established for his farm this year.

Any farmer who has not previously requested a rate determination, but would now like to do so has until the new deadline of October 9 to visit the county ASC office and request a rate determination.

New Postoffice On Court Street

Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield has announced that a new Post Office has been authorized for Appomattox, Virginia.

This announcement, the Postmaster General advised, coincides with the optioning by Post Office Department Regional Officials of a site meeting Departmental requirements as to cost, area and location. The site selected is located at the east side of Court Street. The estate of Amelia C. Ferguson owns the proposed site.

The new postal facility, Postmaster General Summerfield said will be constructed under the Post Office Department's Commercial Leasing Program, which utilizes the resources and investment funds of private enterprise to obtain needed postal buildings.

The new Post Office at Appomattox will contain about 3,600 square feet of floor space, plus a loading platform. The site, comprising about 15,000 square feet, will provide adequate parking and truck maneuvering areas.

Bidding forms, specifications and other pertinent data will be available to prospective bidders in the near future, at which time the Post Office Department will advertise for bids. Thus an equitable construction value will be established on a competitive basis.

"More than 3,000 new Post Offices have been built since 1953 under the Post Office Department's unique Commercial Leasing Program," Postmaster General Summerfield said. "Because these postal buildings remain under private ownership while leased to the Federal Government, the lessor pays local real estate taxes.

"Furthermore, because the buildings are constructed with private investment funds, capital outlays by the Post Office Department are limited substantially to those for Post Office furniture and equipment."

It Blooms Each Year First Monday Night in October

The first Monday night in October is a date to be remembered for the Country Lane Home Demonstration Club of Appomattox.

That is the night they meet with Mrs. Eli Blackwel, and the night The "Star of Bethlemam" blooms!

It happened that way the first Monday night in October last year, and it happened that way again this week.

The "Star of Bethlehem" blooms! rare plant. . . a potted plant, mostly set out outdoors in summer, and moved indoors as the weather demands. It is slow in growing. Mrs. Blackwell has had her show specimen for ten years. But once a year, usually at night, it opens into a glorious bloom, some eight to ten inches across. In gorgeous bloom, it shows "The Manger Scene," all in white, with a tiny pink showing the Infant upon the Manger. According to Mrs. Larry Young, local florist, it is the most gorgeous thing imaginable. We talked with her last night about it. She said that Mrs. Blackwell had called her in, sure that "it will bloom tonight!"

Last year, on the same date, her club met with her, and Mrs. Blackwell was thrilled at no less than ten beautiful blooms resulted. This week the club met again with her, and, surely enough the blooms came out for a few precious hours. About nine o'clock, the "Star of Bethlehem" unfolded, and gasps of admiration came from the guests.

Mrr. Carlton Godsey also has one of these plants, and we are informed that her plant also unfolded in all its beauty this week.
